Looking up to filmmakers like Steven Spielberg, Martin Scorsese, and John Carpenter; Karwin Walker has strived for becoming a filmmaker himself as early as Middle School. He spent his early middle school years understanding the technical aspects of filmmaking. It was during his High School years that he was able to focus more on story, character development and combining that with technical features like, digital compositing and color correction. Before being accepted into The Los Angeles Film School (LAFS), Karwin was a finalist in the film category for the Technology Students Association Regional Competition.

During his academic years at LAFS, he teamed up with fellow student Marco Flores, Jr. He was able to develop and hone in his craft and technical skill throughout his years at LAFS; which led to their partnership to creating a long- standing relationship with Tao Creative. He was able to bring his expertise to the table and create visual effects, motion graphic designs, and act as the technical troubleshooter for various clients. He applies the same high-priority mentality and efficiency with every project that comes their way.
